CF Jordan Construction Named One of America's Safest Companies for 2010

EL PASO- October 5, 2010 – CF Jordan Construction, a leading Texas based commercial construction and construction management company was recently named one of America's Safest Companies by EHS Today Magazine, a publication for environment, health, and safety leaders in the manufacturing, construction, and service sectors. EHS Today Magazine selected 12 companies as 2010's Americas Safest Companies. The companies will receive their awards at a reception dinner in San Diego. To see the complete list of America's Safest Companies for 2010, please visit: <http://ehstoday.com/safety/asc/>.

Patricia Kagerer, Vice President of Risk Management at CF Jordan Construction, stated, "We are honored to earn this title. Everyone at CF Jordan works hard to maintain a safe working environment each and every day. We are delighted that our team's success in safety is being recognized."

In order to achieve the recognition of one of America's Safest Companies, EHS Magazine explains organizations must demonstrate: support from management and employee involvement; innovative solutions to safety challenges; injury and illness rates lower than the average for their industries; comprehensive training programs and more. CF Jordan Construction achieved this award based on their overall dedication to safety, their philosophy of continuous improvement of their process and the commitment to training and educating their employees through Jordan University.
